here, five of them. They are all attorneys, so we've got a good start here tonight. But I don't want to condemn the TERC board too much either because, you know, I helped get one of them on there, and that was Janet Edwards at the time, and I figured she probably had more experience than anybody else on the whole TERC board at the time that we formed it, and I think that she was an assessor, been an assessor for many years, and even served down here in the Department of Revenue, and I think she was well qualified, but I do get complaints about how long it takes, and when you do go, they feel a little intimidated because every thing is all recorded, all wrote down, and completely in, you know, on record of what's happened there. And I've got a...I've got a young guy right now that has filed to go to the TERC board and that was last July, and he is not going to get heard until at least June of this year. So they are behind, and I don't know what to do about that because there is a lot of them coming to them, and there is only three of them to be able to handle them all, and the way that I understand the way they try to do it is try to work closer to Lincoln in the spring months when the people can't get around in the roads, and then get out in the outer part of the state when there is a time, you know, that they can figure that people can get to them. So there's always...they don't want to set up a meeting and to get several people to come to the TERC board, and the weather won't let them get to it. So that's something else, too, that we've got to consider but, I don't know, this is the first time we've actually come back and talked about the TERC board since we formed it, and I don't know just which way to go on it. I'm encouraged by Senator Landis' amendment that I might support that but I don't know about increasing the number. I think that the people that go in front of the TERC board then might feel more intimidated than they do now when they only go in front of three, and now they might be going in front of five, and I'd be opposed to making them all attorneys to be in front of them, too, because I think that'd intimidate them more yet. So these are some things that I think we need to talk about. I don't know just where to go from here but I...I, just like Senator Beutler said, I think that if we want to do it right, we'd probably better vote down the committee amendments and go back to the green copy and start over, if we want to do it that way, and get a clean slate on it to decide just what we are going to
